

Conversations with the Wing

By Col. Mark D.'Eddie' Hammond
132nd Fighter Wing Commander

The 132nd Fighter Wing was born in February 1941 with the creation of the 124th Observation Squadron and since then has performed missions all around the globe. We've accomplished our tasking – submarine patrols over the Gulf of Mexico during WWII, maintaining a strong, capable Cold War force, and flying combat air patrols over Iraq – in an extraordinary way and we're known for getting the job done with Excellence. That legacy of greatness that began sixty years ago will take us over the horizon to new challenges and opportunities ahead. It's the truth; the unit is on track and doing great as a team.

We're no longer a strategic reserve; the state and nation needs us to be an operational reserve and we'll be called to action more often. Balancing increased training requirements, accomplishing AEF deployments and inspections, and joint and domestic operations tasking will require an even greater commitment by all Airmen in the Wing. Technological advances – like upgrades in our computer network and new logistics programs – are changing the way war fighters train and employ. I know these statements aren't revelations. Everyone knows change is the constant in our organization and new Airmen joining our unit are comfortable with it; members who have been around a little longer may struggle a bit with the transforming nature of our mission. There is no need for concern or distraction regarding our ability to get the mission done in the future with the same outstanding results we've had over the years. The leadership in the 132nd Fighter Wing are engaged, talented Airmen on our 'flight lines' all around base are doing awesome work, and the 132nd Fighter Wing has a depth of experience in performing our state and federal mission that is way good. It's the truth; the unit is on track and doing great as a team.

By Col. William D.'Toto' DeHaes
132nd Fighter Wing Commander (Select)

If you hear me say it once, I will say it a thousand times; I am humbled to be your new commander. The 132nd Fighter Wing is known as one of the premier fighter units in the United States Air Force and it is due to your commitment to excellence and hard work. As we pass the guidon, I would like to thank Col. Hammond for his years of service to the Iowa Air National Guard and for leaving the Wing in great shape. He poured his heart and soul into this Wing and we are extremely grateful for his service. Thank you!

As we make the leadership transition, the Wing will have a safety down day and a Commander's call on the 27th of May. Wing Safety will kick off our 101 Critical Days of Summer Campaign and I will outline command expectations and philosophy. For those of you unable to attend, I will be sending out the briefing/talking points base wide to ensure everyone knows the game plan.

If you haven't heard yet, we have an Operational Readiness Inspection 1-6 October. This is our focus until the Inspector General leaves our base. I need everyone to accept their part in ensuring our Wing continues our history of excellence. Know your job and your wingman's job. It doesn't matter if you just returned from tech school or have been here for years. We all need to prepare to show the Inspectors what we are capable of doing. Do not bring it weak!

I will be dropping by different work areas over the next several months. Low threat. I just want to take the opportunity to thank you personally for the excellent job you do, day in and day out. I am looking forward to the challenges of command, but more importantly, the opportunity to command the finest men and women this nation has to offer. Thank you for all you do!

Transition and change in the type and manner of mission in the days ahead will require a new assessment of the efficiencies we use in day-to-day operations. The reason our sixty-year-old organization – part of the three-hundred-sixty-year-old National Guard and this country's oldest fighting force – is so exceptional is because we have members who have been performing their trade for many years. We understand how to maintain jets, secure our Wing with limited manpower, and process and prepare Airmen for deployment because of our depth of experience – something the Active Duty can't draw from and that will result in the Air Force eventually coming to the Air National Guard for Associations. The future of the 132nd Fighter Wing is bright because we will continue to be innovative in the way we accomplish the mission and that ability is recognized at the state and national level. The Distributed Training Operations Center is an example of inventive and forward-leaning use of simulation devices and cyber networks to train joint war fighters and is becoming the standard for low-cost, persistent, and agile training in the Combat Air Force and other joint agencies. It's the truth; the unit is on track and doing great as a team.

Look to the past for heritage and into the future for opportunity; gaze at the contrails of our 'formations' arcing across our successes through the years and be confident. New leadership, energy and ideas will rejuvenate and continue to sustain the unit - as has happened from February 1941 to May 2010. To be part of a tradition of service to family, community, and country and Called to work in a Wing dedicated to one another and mission is something very, very special. It's the truth; the unit is on track and doing great as a team.

The transition is complete with this final edition of The Intake. While many of us still like the look and feel of paper when we read, this transition to web-based wing information gives the Public Affairs office the opportunity to tell the story of the 132nd Fighter Wing not only to our current and past members but to the world. News updated without the 30-60 day delay with print media; multi-media capabilities; the ability to download articles, pictures and video; and coming soon, the ability to check wing news from web-enabled mobile devices. News and announcements at your fingertips now!

Your Newspaper

Each month, the staff of the Office of Information Services will try, through the pages of this newspaper, to keep you informed of the latest Air Guard and Air Force news.

We'll cover wing reviews, parades, policy changes, promotions, enlistments, re-enlistments, command changes, and many other items you're sure to find of interest.

In addition to the straight news, we'll feature unit accomplishments, human interest, unusual happenings, and personalities.

We hope that the greatest bulk of copy appearing in the paper will be squadron news compiled by a news representative in each squadron.

Announcements of coming events may be submitted. And a want ad section will be started if need be. —CAF
